Preaching Vs. Practice.

S. L. Richardson, a white man who formerly lived in Oconee county and who has been in jail at Lexington for some time on a charge of forgery, has been released, his relatives having secured a compromise of the cases against him. It is understood that they secured the compromises by paying to the prosecutors the money that Richardson had obtained by his forgeries.

Richardson now praises the Lord, failing to give his relatives any credit for getting him out of jail, and announces that he will devote the remainder of his life to the "service of the Master."

He says he is going to preaching, but says nothing about going to work to honestly earn enough money to pay back to his relatives the money they have had to pay out because of his forgeries.

It will seem to old fashion people, who look at things in a common sense way, that Richardson is just about the last man that should be allowed to preach the gospel.

He is calculated to do a great deal of harm. There are people who will be encouraged to wrong doing, instead of kept from it, by the spectacle of a known forger preaching from the pulpits without having made restitution for his sins, and without having suffered punishment for them. They will argue that if the Lord took care of Richardson, He would also take care of them if they should acquire money by the unlawful use of other people's names.

This is a free country, and under our constitution a man is allowed to practice and preach any sort of religion that may happen to suit his fancy.

But dishonest people should be punished, and when they are allowed to go free through the influence of friends or relatives they should not be allowed to set themselves up as guides for others. To put such people to preaching will bring religion, of any kind, into disrepute.

Richardson as a preacher of the gospel would do much harm, but as a man honestly acknowledging past mistakes and honestly trying to make restitution for them, he would command the utmost respect and would do a great deal of good.—Anderson Daily Mail.

The Greatest Wonder

They can all say what they please about the great wonders—this, that and the other. How Columbus discovered America, Howe inventing the sewing machine, Whitney the cotton gin, Fulton applying steam, Franklin chaining the lightning, Surgery, medicine, science, fine arts, and on through the list ad infinitum, all come in for their share of platitudes—but the greatest thing ever discovered is Hallum's Backache and Kidney Pills, a boon to sufferers from these ills, the worst that beset the human family.

Trouble with the back and kidneys is one of the most insidious disorders known to medical science today and is hard to eat, from the fact that those who suffer with these maladies hope to wear it off, and when they do have to take treatment expect a cure in a few minutes. Our pills will cure if taken for any length of time. We are kept busy all the time handing out our pills and see who use them speak in the best term of praise, saying they are getting relief and being right along. Why do you when you can get relief.
